

Call-up for fans of fashion

Organisers of the Oversew Fashion Awards are scouting for budding fashion designers and event managers ahead of next year's show.

The awards promote "upcycled" fashion by recognising talented emerging designers who recreate, revamp and redesign pre-loved clothing into a sustainable fashion item or outfit.

The inaugural awards, held in Carterton last year, culminated in a sellout awards evening showcasing 32 high-quality designs. The next events is scheduled for May 24 next year.

Organisers are now looking to build their volunteer executive team and support base with professional, dedicated people. Early next year they will be looking for volunteers.

An information and recruitment session is being held in Carterton next Tuesday.

"If you have expertise in fashion, design, technology, administration, social media, marketing and communications, event management, or are just passionate about volunteering to help establish this competition as a regular event, please come along, have some refreshments, ask some questions, and listen to what we have to offer," says Oversew organiser Robyn Cherry-Campbell.

"We are a dedicated, professional group of volunteers who are committed to seeing the event through from early planning to the awards night and beyond."
